Home Holds

This slide looks at how Championship teams perform when they are ahead at half-time at home (“home holds”). The scatter plot shows Home Hold Win % (how often teams turn those leads into full-time wins) against league position, with circle size showing how many home-hold opportunities each team had. The upward trend suggests that, on average, teams with a higher home-hold win rate tend to sit higher in the table. Four of the league’s top six teams have 100% home-hold win rates, while the four bottom teams have a home-hold win % of 50% or lower. The home holds league table gives the full picture: rank, home-hold win %, home HT and HT+FT wins, points from home holds, and recent home-hold form (W/D/L). Together, the chart and table show that turning half-time home leads into wins is strongly linked to where teams finish in the league.

Comebacks

This slide shows second-half comebacks: games where a team was behind at some point in the second half and still got a draw or a win. The scatter plot shows Comeback % (share of those opportunities converted to a draw or win) against League Position, with circle size showing how many comeback opportunities each team had. What's interesting is that sometimes, you'll get teams whose comeback success far outperforms their league position — Watford and Southampton — and others who severely under-perform — Millwall and Ipswich. Together, the chart and table show that converting second-half comeback opportunities is still strongly linked to league position.
